The Society, which is registered under the provisions of the Friendly Societies Act 1974, is managed by a Chairman and Committee elected annually by the members.

It was formed to facilitate knowledge transfer from research at The James Hutton Institute to growers, processors and other end-users.

An Annual Report of The James Hutton Institute contains reviews of current research work and provides a list of the year's scientific publications. It is available on application to the Secretary of the Society.

Application for Membership

SSCR

The Scottish Society for Crop Research is a registered Friendly Society formed in 1981 by the amalgamation of the Scottish Society for Research in Plant Breeding and the Scottish Horticultural Research Association.

The Society provides a link between The James Hutton Institute farmers, processors and other interested bodies:-

- by organising field walks and meetings for the exchange of information
- by financing science based publications for the benefit of the membership
- through the formation of crop-based sub-committees which maintain contact with members on specialised topics

The James Hutton Institute

The new organisation combines existing strengths in crops, soils and land use and environmental research, and will make major, new contributions to the understanding of key global issues, such as food, energy and environmental security, and developing and promoting effective technological and management solutions to these.

The James Hutton Institute is an internationally networked organisation and operates from multiple sites, including two main ones in Scotland at Aberdeen and Dundee. It employs more than 600 scientists and support staff, making it one of the biggest research centres in the UK and the first of its type in Europe. The institute is one of the Scottish Government's main research providers in environmental, crop and food science and will have a major role in the Scottish knowledge economy.

James Hutton (1726–1797) was a leading figure of the Scottish Enlightenment, an eighteenth century golden age of intellectual and scientific achievements centred on Edinburgh. He is internationally regarded as the founder of modern geology and one of the first scientists to describe the Earth as a living system. His thinking on natural selection influenced Charles Darwin in developing his theory of evolution.
